

Carolyn White Fore, PhD, has many years of leadership experience in a corporate environment with responsibility for multigenerational teams. During those years she saw firsthand the differences in the leadership styles of leaders from different generational groups. She wrote her doctoral dissertation on next-generation leadership, focusing on Millennials as leaders, and through her research explored how Millennial leaders describe leaders, leading, and what leadership means.

Carolyn used her research and experience to write the book Millennials Taking the Lead which offers insight into what has shaped the leadership styles of Millennials and how older generations can learn to appreciate their contribution to their business and vice versa. Carolyn now teaches in the MBA program at Brenau University and continues to explore the leadership style of Millennials and how this generation is changing organizations.

Carolyn has a bachelor of arts in chemistry from the University of North Carolina, a master of education in business data processing from the University of Georgia, and a doctor of philosophy in organization and management from Capella University.
